

Schmeling and Dempsey Battle for One Round

Lake Swannanga, N. J., May 27.—

(AP)—Deep in the woods here Jack Dempsey tied on the gloves again this afternoon and fought a bristling exhibition round with Max Schmeling.

Some 3,000 spectators packed into the little pine saucer to watch the old champion throw punches with the powerful young German, who meets Max Baer in a 15 round bout June 8 at Yankee stadium.

For three minutes the pair, wearing headgears and using bulky gloves, battered and slugged each other about the ring while the crowd yelled itself hoarse and a half dozen movie camerates preserved the scene for posterity.

Dempsey, getting around surprisingly well for his years of inactivity and the fact that he packed a roll of fat about his waistline, gave the crowd a thrill by piling into his young opponent from the start and never slacking his pace until about a minute from the end.

He tossed his murderous left hook into Schmeling's body a half dozen times and his right whistled when he launched it at the German's head. Schmeling fought back. He met Jack's rushes with stinging blows to the face and at close quarters ripped both hands to Dempsey's middle. It was a better fight than anybody expected to see. If either had an edge it was the younger man, but he gained his margin after Dempsey tired.

"I wanted to see if he could take it," puffed Jack after the round had ended. "I hung a right on his jaw with everything I had behind it and he only grinned and threw a left into me that hurt clear to my heels. I'm glad it only went one round."

Examined by an official of the New York state athletic commission after the workout, Schmeling was declared to be in perfect condition for his battle with Baer. Weighing 189 pounds, the German looked better than when he dropped his crown to Sharkey last summer.
